Appraising Strict Liability - A. P. Simester - Oxford ...

Strict liability is a controversial phenomenon in the criminal law because of its potential to convict blameless persons. Offences are said to impose strict liability when, in relation to one or more elements of the actus reus, there is no need for the prosecution to prove a corresponding mens rea or fault element. For example, in the 1986 case of Storkwain, the defendant chemists were ...

This chapter focuses on the American answer to the question: when is strict liability constitutional? and the possible lessons for English law as the Human Rights Act 1998 gives it "a source of 'higher law' that can be used as a benchmark of the constitutionality of criminal legislation". Decisions regarding the constitutionality of strict liability in the United States fit with a ...

Imposing Constitutional Limits on Strict Liability ...

The imposition of strict liability in the criminal law is widely thought by scholars to be unjustified. This chapter argues that it is wrong to convict the blameless of stigmatic crimes. We would be right to object to the enactment of a strict liability homicide offence of, say, causing death by one's action. The mere causing of death does not imply culpability, and such an offence would ...
