Designer: David Lewis. As easy on the eye as they are on the ear, BeoLab 8000 loudspeakers defy conventional thinking in delivering the maximum sound from the minimum of space. There's not much point in thinking about BeoLab 8000 in terms of watts, woofers or tweeters. There has never been loudspeakers that look like this - or so clear and rich a sound produced from such slender cabinets.

The Beolab 8000 was one of the most successful B&O loudspeakers ever, remaining in the range for many years without change to its external appearance or basic technical specification. It combined elegant styling and good performance in a perfect balance, and despite being expensive, remained a popular choice for both music and video systems.

A tall column speaker shaped like a church organ and sitting upon a very small footprint, the curved minimalist design of BeoLab 8000 eliminated sharp edges or joints which could compromise sound quality. The speakers were magnetically shielded in order to be situated in close proximity to a television monitor.

BeoLab 8000 represents both the engineering skills as well as the design capabilities from Bang & Olufsen. Nobody has ever built a speaker with such little net volume, only 5.3 litres, with such an impressive sound. As with all modern B&O speakers, the 8000s are active, meaning that each element has its own amplifier.
