"La Belle Dame sans Merci" is a ballad by John Keats, one of the most studied and highly regarded English Romantic poets. In the poem, a medieval knight recounts a fanciful romp in the countryside with a fairy woman—La Belle Dame sans Merci, which means "The Beautiful Lady Without Mercy" in French—that ends in cold horror. Related to this focus on death and horror, Keats wrote the poem months after his brother Tom died of tuberculosis.

Romantic literature, such as La Belle Dame Sans Merci, was a literary movement that had arisen to counter the theories of the Age of Enlightenment – to bring back imagination, beauty, and art to a culture that had become science-based, theoretical, and realist. Romantic writers saw the violence of the French Revolution as proof of the failure of science and reason, and the suffocation of ...

' La Belle Dame Sans Merci' (loosely translated to 'The Beautiful Woman With No Remorse') was originally the title of an early fifteenth-century French poem, by Alain Chartier, which belongs to the long-held tradition of courtly love. John Keats then developed this title for his famous ballad, which centres instead around a deceitful seductress who tempts men away from reality, into the world of the sublime, and leaves them to die a death of no identity.
